HEBRY WARD BEECHER ON FLOWERS

The following is a report of an address delivered by Henry Ward Boscher; Mr. Beecher said it had been stipulated that a regular speech should not be expected from him, but that he should be permitted to address the assembly in an of hand manner, and if his remarks had no other merit they should have that of approprintevess. He found himself embarrased not by poverty, but the richness of the subject. So many things presented themselves that he hardly knew which to choose, but on the whole he had come to the concion that he would speak of the flowers, sert the superiority of either to the other, for he liked them both, and thought that either of them was inferior to both of them together. LITTLE MARY.

This fine lyric is by William T. Matson, whose poems have just appeared in London. Little Mary, dream-eyed Mary, Mary with her mother dear Dwelt within a mountain cottage, By the banks of Windemere.

Many a strange and subtile fancy Of that listle maid beguiled; Thoughts that are but seldom blended With the dreamings of the child. Youthful Age sat on her forehead, Clustered round with many a carl ; rather than of the fruit; not that he desired to as In her blue eyes joyful sadness. Floated. Dream-eyed little girl !

> All looked grave and shook the head Kist her, played with her fair curl,

> Thought she was a mountain spirit, Not a little wondering girl. But of all her happy rambles, That which mostly pleased the child, Was to roum to Stock Ghyll Water,

On the air her song would tremble, Like an arrow's silver stir :

And to list to his music wild.

She would stand upon the brink To the torrent's voice and think them Of her little heart would beat One-two-and three against her side ; And she clapt her hands and laughed "Ha, ha ! I am the torrent's bride.

> Listening then, the more intently, Ever thus kept rolling down ?

Heart wild beating 'gainst her side. Came the Spirit of the Waters, Kist her, claimed her for his brids Never more within the cottage By the mere was seen the child In her own sweet dream beguiled.

Waters murmur wild and hourse, 'Mong the rocks of Stock Ghyll Force.

On the air a song comes trembling, Like a little streamlet's stir And the torrent sings to her.

SCHILLER'S WORDS OF FAITH.

Man is reised -- poor -- foriors --

And Virtue- is Virtue an empty sound?

The childlike becomes in simplicity.

And God, in holy, eternal love, His purpose of good never alters; Though changes may circle all matter and time God dwells in the peace of perfect sublime.
